About

The establishment of the Interdisciplinary Doctoral School at the University of Warsaw is a response to the challenges faced by academic researchers today. Those challenges consist in conducting innovative research crossing the boundaries between academic disciplines and fields. At the School, doctoral students prepare theses based on achievements in at least two freely elected fields of academic research, with the leading field indicated, or single-field projects without any leading discipline specified.

A doctoral student works under the supervision of at least two supervisors representing different scientific fields. The choice of the main advisor must be made before submitting the recruitment documents. The second supervisor (or assistant supervisor) must be found within a month since matriculation.

Limits: IDS – 30
